Which of the following is a valid PowerShell command to pause a printer job? (Select the correct answer.)

- A. `Stop-PrinterJob -PrinterName "PrinterName" -JobName "JobName"`
- B. `Stop-PrinterJob -PrinterName "PrinterName" -JobName "JobName" -Force`
- C. `Stop-PrinterJob -PrinterName "PrinterName" -JobName "JobName" -Wait`
- D. `Stop-PrinterJob -PrinterName "PrinterName" -JobName "JobName" -Wait -Force`

Answer: A

NEW QUESTION: 2

HOTSPOT

Answer:

Explanation:

Explanation:

*The printer is paused.

*Jobs can always be permitted (even if the printer is paused, or printer not started).

Note:

StartTime

Date and time that a printer can start to print a job - if the printer is limited to print at specific times. This value is expressed as the time elapsed since 12:00 AM GMT (Greenwich Mean Time).

This is sort of a trick question. As it stands, when the PowerShell script was executed, the printer is in "Paused" status, so any submitted job will go to the queue and remain there until the status is "Available". As for the ability to submit a job, a user can SUBMIT the job at any time. If it is outside of the printer's availability range, it will simply remain in the queue until the printer's start time is reached.
