NEW QUESTION: 2 As an architect you have decided to use CloudFormation instead of OpsWorks or Elastic Beanstalk for deploying the applications in your company. Unfortunately, you have discovered that there is a resource type that is not supported by CloudFormation. What can you do to get around this. A. Create a custom resource type using template developer, custom resource template, and CloudFormation. /B. Specify more mappings and separate your template into multiple templates by using nested stacks. C. Specify the custom resource by separating your template into multiple templates by using nested stacks. D. Use a configuration management tool such as Chef, Puppet, or Ansible. Answer: A Explanation: Explanation Custom resources enable you to write custom provisioning logic in templates that AWS Cloud Formation runs anytime you create, update (if you changed the custom resource), or delete stacks. For example, you might want to include resources that aren't available as AWS Cloud Formation resource types. You can include those resources by using custom resources. That way you can still manage all your related resources in a single stack. For more information on custom resources in Cloudformation please visit the below URL:
