NEW QUESTION: 2What is sent from the Oracle database kernel to the Exadata Storage Server using iDB? A. Statistics on data usage B. A command representing the SQL statement C. The filtering predicates from the current SQL statement D. Block requests Answer: C Explanation: The database servers and Exadata Storage Server Software communicate using the iDB - the Intelligent Database protocol. iDB is implemented in the database kernel and transparently maps database operations to Exadata-enhanced operations. iDB implements a function shipping architecture in addition to the traditional data block shipping provided by the database. iDB is used to ship SQL operations down to the Exadata cells for execution and to return query result sets to the database kernel. Instead of returning database blocks, Exadata cells return only the rows and columns that satisfy the SQL query.
